

Search the Shadows, Brave the Light

By feari

Submitted: October 10, 2006

Updated: October 10, 2006

I just like how this came out. ^_^ I really do.

Provided by Funart Central
<http://www.Funart-Central.net>

0. Search the Shadows, Brave the Light

Search the shadows, search the light
Keep watch for that which grabs your sight
Remember where it is you go
And all of the seeds you sow
As you walk the crooked trail
Of self-discovery and self-ail
Walk long into the navy night,
Give in long before the real fight
Stay within the safe, white haven
And have your dreams and hopes craven
The easiest way, most often, isn't right
And thus you fall from a greater height
On great useless shredded broken wings
To which a lost and mournful angel sings
Go on, look long and hard into that mirror,
It does not make your path any clearer
That sole burden belongs to you alone
Wary, be not from your goal easy thrown
Brave the shadows, brave the light
Keep watch for that which grabs your sight
Remember where it is you go
And all of these seeds you sow
On a path to self-enlightenment
At the end, the years all spent
In bitterness, in ache, in discovery, in joy
Life, becoming the mode of employ
Carrying forward time and pace
In which we fill the empty space
With things like dreams, hope, love
Cast your eyes not down, instead above
Likened wishes to aspiration,
Blurring the clear confusion
Dreamt of failed hope and angry lies
The tears of sadness welling in your heart, not eyes
Turned and wandered, cross the marsh and mists
Return and move on again, into the next forbidden tryst
People stare and criticize
Avoid and do not meet your eyes
Shallow minds and wills so frail
Destined, no, doomed to fail
Crack and break beneath the pressure
All lost because of one small fissure
Dismay upon the broken dream
Ripped along an ill-made seam.